Major Study Requirements

The student majoring in Classical Studies choose one of two concentrations, depending on the wish to take a broader spectrum of courses relating to the ancient world (Civilization Concentration) or concentrate in Greek and Latin (Language Concentration). Those students wishing to pursue graduate study in the Classics are advised to choose the Language Concentration.

Justification: We are adding an elective course under category 6, highlighted in the attached document, PHIL 211, which is a new course in the dept of Philosophy. We are adding this course because both PHIL 201 and PHIL 211 are courses on ancient Greek philosophy and should be allowed for our major.

Impact on long-range planning: None

Detailed budget analysis: Course is already being taught in dept of Philosophy.

Faculty Workload Implications: None, this course is already being offered in the Philosophy department.
