Justification

Proposed

Concentration Justification

Ethnology is not a recognizable term for most undergraduates. They are confused by the word and this prevents many from registering for our classes or becoming majors. Sociocultural and Linguistic Anthropology is a transparent term that we are certain will make our concentration more interesting and accessible to undergraduates.

Our new name, "Sociocultural and Linguistic Anthropology," is consistent with the name that other anthropology departments in the US utilize for this field of study and is recognizable. We looked at other department on this campus, and we do not observe a significant possibility for the new name to overlap with other departments or programs.
